

Animal Rights

A level of protection of Animal Rights determines a level of responsibility of any society.

Animal rights in the modern world are being protected more and more, and at the same time a huge number of cases of cruel violation of animal rights are met every day.

Human beings are considered the kings of this world, and animals in many cases are considered as a level-lower, than human beings, creatures. There are good kings, and there are bad kings, and this is why many animals suffer for a range of reasons caused by the people.

In order to live, animals need the same what people need: protected area, friendly attitude, food, etc. There is a wide animal world, which is more and more affected by the people. Negative influence of mankind leads to destroying a natural area and extinction of some kinds of animals. Currently, the world is in danger to lose such wonderful creatures as tigers. One of the reasons for this is lack of certain legal acts, the acts able to prevent extinction of tigers and other kinds of wide cat from hunting and trading. Practically, there is no law in the USA regulating trade of these amazing animals.

Another reason for extinction of many kinds of animals is their natural area destroying. Basically, all living areas of animals – sky, land, oceans – are experiencing some negative changes nowadays. There are different opinions on how much people really affect those negative trends. For instance, climate change is considered to have a place due to different reasons as well as natural. But does it really matter where reasons come from? As glaciers melt, many kinds of animals, like polar bears, are under risk of losing their habitats.

As kings of this world, people should not only decrease their negative influence on animal world, but also make their best in order to protect animals from any danger factor caused for any reason.